A TRAVELING DOG.

"Owney," the famous Scotch Terrier, visits the Topeka Postoffice.

There was a celebrated visitor in Topeka yesterday. It was "Owney." He is a Scotch terrier with more brindle than beauty. Owney's home is in the post-office at Albany, N. Y., but he prefers to travel about the country and has been traveling now five years. In that time he has taken in nearly all the principal cities of the country, and has been written up in the papers of all the larger cities. Owney travels in the mail car with a friendly postal clerk and is transferred from one division to another. He wears a big collar and a harness, and nearly every office puts a tag on him. When the harness gets so heavy he can hardly carry it, it is sent back to Albany and Owney gets a new one. Most of the tags are dated, so it is easy to tell how far he has traveled. The oldest tag on his collar now is dated Seattle, Wash., February 15th, 1894, and has this rhyme: I guess I am an innocent abroad.

For I travel, travel through thick and thin; But I meet with kindly treatment, And like to be taken in.

July 10th he was at Memphis, and his tag states he was interviewed by the Commercial and Scimitar. He was at Bristol, Penn., July 24, Jacksonville, Fla., July 27; Birmingham, Ala., August 4; Belleville, Ill., August 7, and received his latest tag at Wichita last Friday.

Owney came in on the Santa Fe, and after being well fed, was given a tag and sent on east last night.

LITTLE ALBERT LEE.

He Came Dangerously Near Being Identified in Court

AS ONE WHO'D BEEN THERE BEFORE.

The Story of a Boy Tramp—Other Affairs in Police Court Today.

Albert Lee is at present serving no one in the capacity of a fool if he is a little fat German boy. He was in police court this morning. Officer Capron had captured him near the Rock Island depot yesterday and thinking he looked like a runaway, concluded to take him to the station. Albert says he is 16 years old, but if he is he must have forgotten to grow any after he was ten. He is chubby faced and towheaded and wears a smile that is contagious. He had it with him in court this morning. He was charged with being a runaway.

His story was a tolerably straight one—for so small a boy—but the court was rather enjoying the examination and so were the spectators, so it was continued for some little time.

Albert said he had been living with his uncle in Minnesota, but his mother was sick at Newkirk, Oklahoma, and he was going to her. He had been beating his way, he said, on the trains, and had only been arrested once, at Fort Madison, Iowa, where he was held on the same charge as here.

"I think we had better hold you awhile and write to your uncle," said the judge.

Albert opened his eyes at this. "Well, but judge, he lives out in the country, and only goes to town every three weeks," said he.

"Well, we'll write to your mother then."

"She lives in the country, too, and don't get to town but once a month."

"Does your mother know you are coming?"

"No, I'm going to sprize her—if I ever get there."

"If I let you go when will you leave town?"

"First blamed train that comes along, judge, an' that's the dead honest truth."

"Well, I'll let you go this time."

Albert's baby teeth showed themselves for a moment and he slid out of the door to the front room, where he engaged a little colored boy in a game of checkers.

Officer Steele thought he saw something familiar about the lad and made a search of his "gallery" with the result that he found a picture that looked so near like Albert that he concluded to make an examination. The description beneath the picture was of a boy named Chauncey Moore who had run away from Terre Haute, Ind. The picture looked like Albert, only it was much better dressed. He had the eyes and the hair, the size, the age, the vaccination mark and the dimples.

"Has marks left by the chicken pox," read the description.

"Here they are," said Steele.

"Oh, go 'way, then," "skeeter bites," exclaimed Albert in disgust. And the judge sustained the objection saying he had had chicken pox himself.

"Well," said Steele, "There's another description here, and I believe the boy answers one of them."

"Gee, that feller wants a reward mighty bad, don't he," said Albert with a weary look.

"I think you'd better slide out before he finds it," suggested Judge Easminger, and Albert took the advice.

The last the police saw of him he was going up Fifth street towards the Santa Fe depot on the trot.

James Johnson's Case.

James Johnson's case was on the docket this morning. It was one of those cases in which the mother's good advice has been lost upon a wayward son. Johnson is a young man and was charged with having stolen $3.50 out of a Kansas avenue money drawer. It was his first offense and his mother's heart was nearly broken. She had visited the judge at his home yesterday and with tears and sobs begged him to spare her boy.

The boy pleaded guilty this morning and after the judge had given him a lecture that must have sunk deep into his heart he was given the minimum fine of ten dollars, which he has since paid.

Charley Williams, who has "been there before, many a time," was up for having been intoxicated. Charley wanted just one hour to walk out of town, but the judge thought the town would like his society a short time longer and so he was fined $15.

Other Cases.

Mr. J. Ed Davis, a white young man who had been lodging in front of the store of J. M. Hayes Saturday afternoon and "fooling" with a colored boy was next called. Mr. Hayes had had him arrested on charge of disturbing the peace, but the judge couldn't find any peace that had been disturbed so he let the young man go home to the disgust of Mr. Hayes.

The next victim's name was Jack Robinson and quicker than you could say it he pleaded guilty to having been slightly under the influence and was assessed five dollars.

Joe Weber was also guilty of the same terrible offense and paid his five dollars like a little man and went his way.

Fanny Wright was in again this morning and was charged with parading the street for purposes not mentioned except in Kentucky politics. The minimum fine for that sort of thing is $10 and as Fanny only had five her lawyer, Mr. Jamison, asked that the charge be changed to "drunk," although she wasn't. The police agreed to this and like a wise little girl she pleaded guilty to the charge and "broke" herself.

The case of Ed Martin, drunk, was dismissed.

Admiral Erben, of the Chicago, Can't Accept Invitation of the English.

SOUTHAMPTON, Aug. 27.—As the United States cruiser Chicago is short of officers Rear Admiral Erben has been compelled to decline the invitation of the mayor and municipal officers of Southampton, who were desirous of banqueting the Americans. Admiral Erben has explained to the mayor that he would be unable to send a representative number of officers to the banquet, and therefore he must decline the entertainment which
